Mesa State College Offers First Energy Management Symposium

Grand Junction – Mesa State College will host its first symposium geared towards energy industry professionals in the region on September 17-18. The two-day seminar will be presented through the MSC Department of Business and its new Landman/Energy Management program and will give lawyers and laymen an opportunity to learn more about the new oil and gas regulatory environment in Colorado.

This symposium will provide a forum so people from the industry as well as the MSC community may learn more about timely issues facing oil and gas management professionals in Colorado. It will feature speakers presenting on topics ranging from surface owner and industry perspectives regarding the new Colorado Oil and Gas Conservation Commission regulations to the future of natural gas in Colorado.

“We are very pleased to make this opportunity available to those working in or interested in the energy industry,” said Mesa State President Tim Foster. “It is also a great opportunity for our students in the Landman program to network with industry professionals.”

Symposium registration is available online until September 10. After that, participants may call 970.248.1902 to register. For professionals, seeking continuing education credits, there are six Certified Professional Landman, six National Association of Division Order Analysts or seven Continuing Legal Education credits available. General professional development opportunities are also available. Hotel room blocks are available at the Clarion Inn, Courtyard by Marriott and the Ramada Inn through September 1.

For additional information about the symposium, accommodations or to register online, visit www.mesastate.edu/energysymposium or call 970.248.1902.
